

Not In Our Town: Class Actions

Premieres on PBS in February 2012

Check local listings for details

How do we learn from the past? From tragedy? From our own mistakes?

Three towns. Three lessons learned. Three stories of student leaders and their communities standing together to stop hate.

Oxford, Mississippi

In the heart of the South, students at the University of Mississippi question whether traditions tied to the Confederacy and segregation continue to belong on their campus. When a chant and football fight song surface old racial tensions and divide the Ole Miss community, student leaders, supported by their chancellor, bring people together.

Photo credit: Charles Tucker

Bloomington, Indiana

As Indiana University students celebrate the holiday season, the sense of calm is shattered by a series of attacks against Jewish institutions. Bloomington United, a community group created in 1998 after a white supremacist spread hate and murder on campus, reaches out to IU students and helps heal new wounds.

Lancaster, California

On the edge of the Mojave Desert in California, educators, political leaders, and students face the dangers of bullying after teen suicides devastate two nearby towns. A local middle school counselor initiates an anti-bullying program throughout the district and students take the lead in standing up to hate in their community.

For more information, please visit NIOT.org.

Photo credits: (L-R) William Bender, Anthony Lucero, Bloomington Herald-Times

www.NIOT.org

Major support for this program is provided by PBS, the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, and the Einhorn Family Charitable Trust.